

Search Jobs

Location

25 mi

Career Advice

From Marc Cenedella

APRIL 25, 2011

I thought today would be a good day to celebrate the successes of your fellow subscribers in landing jobs so far in April.

Read more

See more newsletters from Marc

HOT TOPICS

Anxiety, Depression and the Job Search

Working With Recruiters

Interview Questions and Answers

Age and Your Job Search

Cover Letters

CATEGORIES

Marc's Newsletters

Success Stories

News & Advice

TOPICS

Resume

Personal Branding

Job Search

Networking

Interviewing

Salary

Career Advice Home > Job Search > 10 On Ramps to Successful Onboarding

Job Search

10 On Ramps to Successful Onboarding

Set yourself up for success at your new job — even before your first day there.

APRIL 25, 2011

By Debra Donston-Miller

Recommend 12

Tweet 15

ShareThis

You don't just start a new job these days; you onboard. TheLadders solicited advice from career development and HR experts on the best ways to maximize those first days and months in a new position. Here are 10 onramps to successful onboarding.

1. Don't wait for the first day. The first steps to success in a new job begin before the first day, said Ian Ide, a partner in the Technology Division of Winter, Wyman. "After accepting an offer you should speak directly with all appropriate parties, including both the hiring manager and human resources," he said. "During these calls, you should convey your excitement and enthusiasm for your new role."

2. Make early connections on social media. Social-networking sites such as LinkedIn provide an opportunity to connect with members of your new organization even before you walk through the door, experts said. As with anything social, however, take care to put your best professional foot forward and ensure that those pictures of your hard-partying college days have long been expunged from any of your online profiles.

3. Create a solid 30-/60-/90-day plan. Working with your new manager, map out a course to follow during your initiation into the company, said Jennifer Remis, a senior learning associate at Vistaprint. Set goals with measurable benchmarks for success for one, two and three months on the job. These goals should be developed within the framework of overall business goals and informed by ongoing meetings with key colleagues. "Be clear on how your success will be measured so that you'll know where, and on what, to focus your attention immediately and over the longer term," added Roy Cohen, author of "The Wall Street Professional's Survival Guide."

4. Identify key resources and how to access them. Cohen said it's important to identify the resources you must have to do your job. They could be as simple as office supplies or getting your phone connected to a more significant investment such as access to technology. The sooner you acquire basic equipment, the faster you can contribute — and it's also an opportunity to get to know the support team at your new job.

5. Develop relationships with the go-to people within the organization. Speaking of support, there are always individuals within any company that can help you get things done because of their institutional knowledge or their relationships with key people within the organization, said Dianne Shaddock Austin, principal, Easy Small Business HR. Find out who those people are and develop a relationship with them. "These are the people that can help you in a pinch," she added, "whether it's the receptionist or the person in the mailroom."

6. Seek opportunities to make a difference. While distinguishing

Article Search

Editors' Choice

High-School Buddy, Job Connection

By Andrew Klappholz

APRIL 25, 2011

Facing 50 Questions for Every Job Interview

By Patty Orsini

MAY 24, 2010

Understand the Mind of the Interviewer

By Dan Coughlin

DECEMBER 6, 2010

4 Steps to Speak Better in Interviews

By Jayne Latz

MAY 28, 2010

6 Face-Saving Antidotes to Awkward Situations

By Scott Ginsberg

JANUARY 11, 2010

Join TheLadders now:

- 61,175 pre-screened $100K+ jobs
- Professional resume writing services
- Exclusive career advice from industry experts

Select Field...

First Name

Last Name

Email

Create Password

START YOUR SEARCH

Reader Favorites

How to Answer the 'Tell Me About Yourself' Interview Question

By Lee E. Miller

SEPTEMBER 22, 2009

2011 Salary Negotiation Tactics

By Kristina Cowan

JANUARY 17, 2011

The 24-Step Modern Resume

By Lisa Vaas

SEPTEMBER 6, 2010

yourself as the friendly, hard-working new guy, scour the landscape for the best place to make the greatest changes for the better, suggested Sean O'Neil, principal, One to One Leadership. "Maybe the company lacks a desirable expertise that you have or could acquire," he said. "Perhaps there's a new product idea or vertical market to attack. Just keep eyes and ears peeled. Once your first 30 days over, just being nice and omnipresent won't cut the mustard. You're going to need to bring real value."

7. Bring a little humility to the new job. While you want to make an impression, it's important for the new guy to temper enthusiasm with a little humility and a show of respect for the people and events that have preceded him. Vivian Scott, author of "Conflict Resolution at Work for Dummies," suggests asking questions that start with a statement of appreciation for current employees. She added that if you find someone is upset with you, apologize even if you don't think you should have to. "Regardless of what you might understand about the political climate, you never really know who's who or who might end up being your boss," she said.

8. Course-correct when necessary. Make sure to check in every week or two with your hiring manager to course-correct in any areas where she sees you veering off track, recommended Elene Cafasso, an executive coach at Enerpace. "Use these meetings to also renegotiate deliverables and manage expectations as you learn more from your stakeholders," she added. "Don't be afraid to ask for your manager's assistance when needed."

9. Keep a positive attitude. Any new position is bound to incur some minor disappointments as well as pleasant surprises, said Winter, Wyman's Ide. "The first few weeks involve a transition from the excitement of the offer and interview process to the reality of the role," he said. "Displaying energy and enthusiasm during this period will go a long way toward making a positive impression with all of your colleagues."

10. Give yourself a break. Starting a new job is high on the stress meter. Remember that everyone knows you are new, and that no one (hopefully) expects perfection right out of the gate. And know that your second 90 days are sure to be more comfortable than the first.

---

Debra Donston-Miller covers work-life issues and difficult job-search situations for TheLadders.

---

Jobs Accepted This Month at TheLadders — April 2011

---

How to Use Your Personal Brand to Switch Careers

By Scott Ginsberg      FEBRUARY 25, 2011

How to Force Feedback Following a Job Interview

By John Batteiger      FEBRUARY 14, 2011

FinanceLadder
UpLadder

HRLadder

LawLadder

MktgLadder

OpsLadder

SalesLadder

TechnologyLadder

Affiliates | Publisher Tools | Contact | Work at TheLadders | About TheLadders | Jobs | Job Directory | Top Companies | Resume Services | Career Line News | Help | Site Map | Privacy | Terms of Use

© Copyright 2011 TheLadders